The Human Resources and Labour Relations Program in Athabasca University's Centre for Interdisciplinary Studies in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences invites applications for a tenure-track position at the rank of Assistant Professor, commencing January 1, 2021. This is a full-time position located in Alberta. Athabasca University is a fully-accredited, comprehensive academic and research post-secondary institution with a commitment to facilitating open access to education.

The ideal candidate will have a PhD in Sociology, Labour Studies, Employment/Industrial Relations or with a work-related focus in Gender Studies, Critical Race Studies, or Indigenous Studies. PhDs in other interdisciplinary areas may be considered. Applications are encouraged from those whose scholarship critically addresses, and with an active scholarly research program in, one or more of the following areas: equity in the workplace, including issues of gender and race; new forms of work, including the gig economy and informal work; and/or precarious work. Scholarship should critically reflect upon issues of social justice and equity. Experience or direct knowledge of unions would be an asset.

The candidate will be expected to develop new courses as determined by the needs of the program and their research interests. The candidate will also coordinate and revise existing courses in the program. Evidence of teaching excellence at the undergraduate level is required, and familiarity with online systems of course delivery and distance education preferred. Experience with community engagement and organizing would be an asset. All educational credentials must be recognized in Canada.
